Identify Key Results

It is good to bring key results to your team for discussion when you have an early draft. This helps you gather inputs, keep team members engaged, and create rigorous debate to ensure that your final key results are a solid representation of your strategy.

This activity will help you identify key results.

Instructions:

1. List the 3 objectives that you prioritized in the prior exercise, for the hypothetical smartwatch scenario.
2. For each of the 3 objectives, list 3-5 key results that you could measure. Remember, the situation is that you are a small team at a startup and you are setting key results for the next 3 months (1 quarter).
