

TOOL

Collect Feedback Template

Instructions

You can use this tool when doing roadmap planning, potentially on a quarterly basis. Use the sample chart here and list all of your projects across the top. List your stakeholders across the left side. Then, each stakeholder gets 100 points to distribute across the projects. You can manage this in different ways. For example, projects could be different sizes (i.e. 10 points, 20 points, 30 points) or they could all be the same, such as 20 points each. The main point is that stakeholders are forced to prioritize and only fund the most important projects, without enough points to fund everything.

Then, share this with your stakeholders and let them submit their votes. It is a powerful tool to help people empathize with the hard decisions you need to make and for you to get valuable input. You might find interesting patterns. For example, there could be a project that many people recommended you work on but nobody funded when forced to prioritize. This makes conversations much easier when you decide not to fund a project.
